Reintroduction of Gray Wolves in Yellowstone National Park

The reintroduction of ~~the gray wolves~~ (Canis lupus) to ~~western~~ America was the first successful project of its kind due to the integration of natural pack breeding and ~~successful~~ the successful reduction in the number of wild elk in the area (Robbins, 2004). Additionally, apart from the predicted consequences, the reintroduction of the apex predator has yielded other unexpected benefits ~~have been evident~~, including ~~fLOURISHING~~ flourishing beaver, trout and red fox populations, which can be largely attributed to the reduction in coyotes (Ripple and Beschta, 2003). Additionally, the numbers of voles, mice and other rodents have thrived, leading to substantially more prey for other mesopredators. Furthermore, the increase in elk and moose carcasses ~~have~~ provided essential scraps to a plethora of scavengers, including magpies, bald eagles, golden eagles, ravens and grizzly bears, with as many as 135 scavengers approaching any one wolf kill. (Robbins, 2004; Mox et al, 2005).

From a policy perspective, the reintroduction process ~~from a policy perspective~~ was time-consuming and ~~very complex~~, as it involved both federal and state governments and fueled disagreements from multiple interest groups. This essay critically analyzes the case study in terms of ~~the~~ environmental problems and related policy adoption ~~respectively~~.
